PHILADELPHIA: THE AMERICAN CITY

AN HISTORICAL AND DESCRIPTIVE SKETCH BY TALCOTT WILLIAMS

Philadelphia was the first of American cities to reach the permanent character which it was to keep for all time. For cities, like men, have their youth and their maturity, their temperament and their character, their careers and their destiny, their triumphs and their failings, those who hate and those who love. There has been no moment for 3,000 years when Damascus has not been rapt among its waters and sat in its tender green. The Roman camp about which the Parisi gathered differed no whit in the letters of Julian a millennium and a half ago from Paris in the letters of Balzac. There has been no moment for 3,000 years when Singan-fu has not held its solitary state in its narrow, walling mountain, a city of dignities and ranked palaces, be they empty, as for centuries past, or full, as in the last twelvemonth.

Our American cities come but late to their historic right. No one confounds the Boston of Faneuil Hall and the Common with the Boston of the Public Library and of open squares, thronged streets and brilliant and builded ways. The New York of Wall Street and the Battery is not the imperial city which queens it over a harbor full of gathered boroughs. Even in Chicago, they draw their sharp line between the city "before the fire," frame, low, squalid, and the growing splendors which have piled the business town of the modern Babel on the trembling morass. These all change. Philadelphia remains stanch and American from its start, through all its spreading thousands between the rivers and beyond.

This city had no frontier youth. It had won its charter twenty years after the first house had been built on its city site and the gap between the first Swede settlement and a Mayor and Burgesses dealing with all city evils was briefer than for any other of our Atlantic municipalities. It grew like a mushroom, 2,500 houses in a score of years. No other colonial city saw the like. The thin line of gabled houses, perched on the steep river bank in 1720, up which Franklin climbed a few years later, had bloomed into towers and steeples, the State House and Christ Church, the square residences of South England and the double-gabled roofs of the Palatine before he had reached middle life.

Its very colonial days alone of our early cities drew together all the fore-runners of national greatness. It had at its western gate the wheat-fields of Lancaster and first sent out corn to feed other lands. On its very soil the pine and oak, cypress and chestnut met, and on the Delaware began the larger American shipbuilding on sites where the greater yards of the future were to launch the warships of Czar and Mikado with the serried fleets of the Republic. It had its Germantown when all the other colonies were English and insular, and all the arts of Central Europe were brought here by the artificers of the Rhine. Here tanning began, and here shoes were earliest made for more than local use, the wool trade began here and here the lesser arts of life. Here beer was first brewed, here the printing-press began in more than one tongue. Iron was first made about it, and arms and the Conestoga wagon—the wain of Central Europe—began Western trade and prefigured the Philadelphia locomotive, whose voice has gone through the earth and the sound thereof, from the Southern to the Northern seas.

When the Revolution came the city was compact of all the strands of later national life. Foreign tongues were spoken in its streets and the stream of its life was enriched by German and Moravian, by Huguenot and by Spanish Jew, the long-lineaged aristocrat of his race, whose descent makes all other seem of yesterday. It was the natural center of the colonies, the keystone of their arch. Here were the great bankers, Morris and the rest. In their banking parlors the debts of the infant Republic were funded, for European financiers knew no other American credits. Its State House was the one imposing secular building of the Thirteen Colonies, and it remains nigh two centuries

WILLIAM PENN'S SUPPOSED TREATY WITH THE INDIANS AT SHACKAMAXON (NOW KENSINGTON), NOVEMBER 30, 1682

Though there is doubt whether Penn made the particular treaty as commemorated in Benj. West's painting, after which the engraving is made, the chronicles in the affirmative say that Penn wore on that occasion a sky-blue sash, and that Chief Tammanend (Tammany) conveyed lands to him, giving as a token of friendship a bundle of deerskins. The site of the treaty is marked by a monument

PHILADELPHIA AS SEEN FROM THE WEST JERSEY SHORE, 1754

After a view made by George Heap, by direction of Nicholas Scull, Surveyor General, Province of Pennsylvania. The city occupied a strip of land along the river, in which the islands, subsequently removed, were then only shoals. The battery with 27 cannons, on the site of the old Navy Yard, was built with funds raised by lottery by Franklin and other citizens after it was built, a model of colonial dignity, grace and effective simplicity. Cannon could be cast at Valley Forge, and only there. Artificers knew here the secret of powder-making. The royal post-office was established in this city by Franklin, and all the threads of correspondence and communication gathered in the office over which he presided and whose mails passed without a break—the one royal department of State which did—from Crown to Republic, and proved of incalculable service to the new cause, which used the old expresses and mail routes.

So it came to pass that here the first Continental Congress met in Carpenters' Hall. Independence Hall gained its name from the great document it saw signed, and later sheltered a body greater and charged with a more difficult task than even independence, the Federal Constitutional Convention, which raised the pillars of constitutional liberty and rounded the arch of "a more perfect Union." Philadelphia in no small sense both financed and fought the War of the Revolution. Its brief occupation by Howe left nothing but the line of redoubts along Spring Garden street, and the social tradition of the Meschianza, for this city shares with historic Charleston an organized social life which antedates independence. This city was the center of the Confederation. Congress sat here. From here commissions were issued, and here foreign negotiations were conducted. The first frigates of the "Alliance" were built here, and in the Delaware an American navy, built in American waters, was launched when John Paul Jones was showing how American sailors could sail and fight French ships. For a season, the city was the capital of the United States. In this city the Supreme Court began its work and the departments were organized. Foreign ministers were first received at the modest State Department on a side street in a narrow two-story house, and the Republic first saw its effigy coined on money from its own mint, just housed in a new and stately pile, which continues an ancient tradition. Washington was President here, and Adams; and Franklin, the most famous American of his day, saw his last, full of years and honor, in the city whose open field had seen him begin kite-flying in electrical enterprises, a pursuit still practised.

A century ago this city was great because great men had walked its streets. William Bradford had begun the journalism of the Middle States and vindicated its freedom in the defense of a great libel suit. The press of this city, which Franklin distinguished and to which Jefferson contributed, has expanded since into a daily press, which has through a century reflected the characteristic qualities of the life of Philadelphia. The success of "Godey's," early in the century just over, is exceeded later by "The Ladies' Home Journal."

More than one chapter of American life was first opened in the early days of the city. John Bartram, in the stone house still standing, wrote the first chapters in American botany; and David Rittenhouse made the first astronomical instrument, observation entry and calculation on American soil. John Godfrey invented the sextant. The American Philosophical Society was the first scientific society in the land, and still meets in the hall Franklin secured for it, and the president each fortnight sits in Franklin's chair. The Philadelphia Library was the first library—remains one of the important—and its two buildings, on Juniper and on Christian streets, stand in a city which maintains its ancient tradition by having to-day in its Free City Library the largest circulation of any free library anywhere, larger per capita than in any other city. Benjamin West began American art in this city, and when he painted "Penn's Treaty" opened a new chapter in landscape art by first giving each tree its leaf and form, breaking away from earlier convention, as he had in the costumes of his heroes. Rush modeled here the first American statue, and Stuart and Sully began the high tradition of American portraiture, which the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts, the oldest academy and art school, has zealously and successfully continued. Charles Brockden Brown opened American fiction a century ago, Franklin the American essay and autobiography, and Benjamin Rush medical literature. He shared in this work the early eminence of the city in medical science, an eminence still maintained and visible in great medical schools, with an aggregate attendance of some 4,000 students, and the College of Physicians, with the third largest medical library anywhere. This society itself, with its building, is but one of the various group devoted to science and its applications—the Academy of Natural Sciences, now not far from its centennial and possessing in its collections a great proportion of type-specimens, and the Franklin Institute, first of engineering societies. To these must be added, for history is also science and true science history, the Pennsylvania Historical Society, with an unrivaled collection of the early imprints and books of the Middle States.

For a generation, from 1682 to 1720, the city grew on the steep bank of the Delaware, dotted about with farms and hamlets; later Richmond, Kensington, Germantown and the farms to the west and on the "Neck," in its fertile and flooded fields. For seventy years, to the close of the Revolutionary era, with the death of Franklin in 1790, Philadelphia, in population, in trade, in position, in public influence, was the first city in the colonies, dependent or independent. It was in many senses the only "city." Its streets were paved—none others were. It had sidewalks. It had some street lamps—not many. It enjoyed the largest international trade. It was the monetary center. All the larger corporations, early land deals and speculative enterprises were launched here. It was the city to which the great bulk of emigration and the select emigrés came. Refugees from England, like Priestley; or from France, like Louis Philippe, Talleyrand or Joseph Bonaparte, sought the city, and a small but valued emigration came from

At the time represented this locality for more than a century had been a centre for building wooden ships. Near this spot is the great Cramp Shipyard, where much of the present U. S. Navy was built. Close by are the Neafie & Levy Shipyards, the Kensington Engine Works, etc. The ground occupied by the great elm up to 1810 is now Penn Treaty Park

INDEPENDENCE HALL AND INDEPENDENCE SQUARE, set apart to "remain a public green and walk forever," Walnut Street from Fifth to Sixth Streets The State House yard or square was long a fashionable resort and favorite place for town and public meetings. Oct. 5, 1765, citizens met here to protest against the Stamp Act, and in Aug. 1768, to proclaim against obnoxious duties. Here, July 8, 1776, the Declaration of Independence was publicly read, and here in 1861 recruiting officers from various Pennsylvania Regiments pitched their tents

LAUNCHING OF THE UNITED STATES BATTLESHIP "MAINE." AT CRAMP'S SHIPYARDS, JULY 27, 1901. Christening was by Miss Mary Preble Anderson, a descendant of Com. Preble, "Father of the American Navy." The keel plate of the new "Maine" was laid Feb. 15, 1899, the first anniversary of the destruction of the old battleship "Maine" in Havana Harbor, when 266 officers and men were killed. The new battleship is of 18 knots speed, 16,000 horse power; 393 ft. 10 1/2 inches over all; 72 ft. 2 1/2 in. beam; 12,300 tons displacement. In the background is Petty's Island, where William Cramp, founder of this great yard once built ships. At the left is the American Liner "New York," having new machinery put in; at the right the Clyde Liner "Arapahoe" and the powerful floating derrick "Atlas."

ing free tuition in medicine, law, science, college and art studies to deserving pupils of the common schools, both boys and girls. The city debt has been steadily diminished, in spite of these great improvements. Still greater are before the city in filtration, new art gallery and library, the removal of the almshouse and repaving. New projects for the city's general development unceasingly come up for consideration by the city administration.
Private wealth and public munificence have made a leap forward not less great. The financial traditions of the Revolution were renewed when the great house of Drexel spread its connections and influence to the world; three great monetary centers, New York, London and Paris. The Bank of North America, chartered in 1781, and still continuing under its original charter, the first of banks with national relations, leads in age the two groups of banks which have furnished the nation's general banking institutions. They have been supplemented by a growing list of trust companies and savings banks. This growth has enlarged the capital, widened the enterprises and increased the activities of the city. The reorganization of the Reading, and the construction of its subway, partly at its expense, and partly at the expense of the city, both altered its relations to the development of the city, adding to the growth of its rural regions and removing from the business and financial relations of Philadelphia a hazard which had impeded its development through nearly twenty years. As a result the anthracite industry for the first time in a quarter of a century was placed on a settled basis under a definite arrangement between capital and labor which appears likely to eliminate the struggles of the past, each of which has always checked the industrial growth of the city. The growth of the suburban ring of the population due to this cause, the development of the Pennsylvania Railroad and the expansion of the trolley system brought on a congestion of passenger traffic in the center of the city which rendered necessary the construction of a subway in Market street. It is expected that this will be completed in two years, and that it will shorten the time taken in reaching the outskirts of the city nearly one-half. With this change there came a sudden advance in two great industries. Ship-building was greatly increased and the steamship traffic of the city has yearly enlarged for five years past. The pressure of population upon the center of the city has led to the building of the skyscraper, and a city which up to a few years ago had few great structures in its center has seen erected one great building after another with plans for many aerial piles in process of completion. This has been accompanied by a growth more rapid than in any other period of the past of small houses in the suburbs. Their construction sprang as a natural result from an expansion in manufacture and trade which has doubled the number of persons

THE LAND TITLE BUILDING—THE LAND TITLE AND TRUST CO., Broad Street, west side, from Chestnut to Sansom Streets.

Nothing better typifies the modern development of Philadelphia than the lofty and handsome 22-story Land Title Building, an ideal office structure, erected in 1902. The Land Title & Trust Co., William R. Nicholson, President, has gross assets of about $6,000,000, a capital of $2,000,000 and surplus $1,000,000.

employed during the past ten years in the greater enterprises of the city like Baldwin's Locomotive Works, Cramp's Shipyards, Wanamaker's, Strawbridge & Clothier's, an advance which has not been less conspicuous in other manufacturing and department stores. The University of Pennsylvania has been moved to a new site, provided with some thirty new buildings—among them a new museum, hospital and observatory—and raise to the first rank in the number of its students. The Drexel Institute, just now increasing its size, is another great foundation furnishing technical and art training. Girard College, founded three-score years ago with an endowment of some $15,000,000, has been improved, enlarged and quickened in all its work, advancing more in the last ten or fifteen years than in all before. The Williamson Trade School is another great foundation for the instruction of boys. The art schools of the city have in all 4,500 pupils, doubled in twenty years. Its increase in the appliances of industrial training has been matched by an advance as ample and as rapid in the benevolence and charity of the city. Its noted hospitals have increased in number and in size, and special institutions for the epileptic and consumptive and other specific maladies have been established. The work of relief has been improved and the work of its organization. A truant act and schools for defective children have dealt with the children who did not attend school. The House of Refuge, the Institution for the Deaf and Dumb and the Blind Asylum have all been furnished with new homes in the country in the past decade, private liberally supplementing endowed funds. Hospitals have grown up all over the city, the growth of beds far outstripping population. A tenth of the realty of the city is to-day devoted to education, hospitals and churches, without reckoning endowment. No city makes a more liberal tithe. There has been apparent at all points in a multitude of minor details, not only an increase in the contributions of benevolence, but in the skill of those who administer the manifold aid of the city in all its various forms—public, private and individual.

At the present time scores of notable new structures, besides those already referred to, are being erected in all sections of the city and suburbs. The Widener Training School for Crippled Children is a most worthy addition to great educational institutions. New office buildings, such as the Arcade, the Commonwealth Trust, the Mutual Life, the Land Title, the Foerderer, the Pennsylvania and others are now under way. Several grand hotels are also in process of erection, one to replace the Stratford and be the peer of any hotel in the world; another to replace the Young Men's Christian Association building; and still another completed in 1902, by John Stanford, to be at the corner of Walnut and Thirteenth streets. Several gigantic department stores, Wanamaker's, Snellenburg's, and Gimbel's, are being erected. Apartment houses with all the modern luxuries are springing up all over the city. Many new factories and many extensive additions to those already existing are noticeable everywhere. In a general way the city has never shown more healthy development than at the beginning of the Twentieth Century.

This splendid and symmetrical growth has now gone on for over two centuries. Evil there is, has been and will long exist. Blots there are, bitterly to deplore. But if one watch and regard the deeper course of this majestic current which from small beginnings has flowed to this great city, there is in it limitless encouragement. Wealth has increased and population; but most of all, the home comfort, education, the security, health and happiness of the family.

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD STATION, Broad and Market Streets, opposite the Public Buildings.

Magnificent Gothic railroad station, ideally appointed. A superb terminus for the "Standard Railroad of America." To reach the centre of the city the company bought many acres of costly ground and built an elevated road of masonry a mile long. Opened Dec. 5, 1891. Reconstructed and vastly enlarged 1883. Main building 306 feet on Broad St. and 212 feet on Market. Train house 707 feet long.

CLOCK ON PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD STATION, Broad, N. W. Cor. Market Sts. A beautiful work of art executed in terra cotta by Karl Bitter. It is illuminated at night, and, considering its artistic features and the number of people who look at it daily, is one of the most important timepieces in the city.

RELIEFS ON PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD STATION, Broad, N. W. Cor. Broad Street. The station is elaborately adorned with terra cotta statuary, by Bitter, including the vignettes, representing the great cities of the country; the magnificent "Progress of Transportation," in the waiting room; the panel "Progress," over the 15th Street Arch, and the fine figure pieces adorning the pediments.

READING TERMINAL—PHILADELPHIA & READING RAILWAY STATION, Market and Twelfth Streets

One of the world's greatest railroad stations, at the heart of a great metropolis, on its chief wholesale thoroughfare. The main building is 266 feet on Market street and 107 on Twelfth street. Eight stories high, of New England granite, white terra cotta and pink tinted brick. Train shed is 266 feet wide, 507 feet long. Span covers 16 tracks. Part of the ground floor is a great public market

BIRD'S-EYE VIEW OF PHILADELPHIA IN 1900, SHOWING THE MAIN PART OF THE CITY, THE DELAWARE RIVER FRONT, AND THE WINDING SCHUYLKILL WITH ITS BRIDGES. Drawn by Richard W. Rummell for "King's Philadelphia Views."
 This gives an adequate idea of the central part of the Quaker City, which lies principally between the Delaware and Schuylkill Rivers. Beyond the Schuylkill West Philadelphia extends for three and a half miles. Originally the city, laid out by William Penn, was a strip a mile wide, extending between the two navigable rivers. It is now from five to ten miles wide and twenty-two miles long. The Delaware River has a deep water front of nineteen miles, and the Schuylkill fourteen and a half miles, spanned by eighteen bridges. The enormous shipbuilding carried on along its banks causes the Delaware to be called the "Clyde of America." Here many of the greatest warships of the world were built. Across the Delaware is the city of Camden, New Jersey, a point of which appears in the foreground. The island shown is Petty's Island. League Island, with its modern Navy naval station, is at south end of city

INDEPENDENCE HALL AND LIBERTY BELL, Chestnut Street, between 5th and 6th Streets
Built in 1731 for a State House, and so occupied till 1799, when the capital was moved from the city. In the East Room the Declaration of Independence was adopted and signed; also the Articles of Confederation and the Constitution of the United States. Restored 1833 and 1898, and excepting the towers appears as in 1776. Liberty Bell cracked tolling the death of Chief Justice Marshall

THE STAUCHEST CITY IN AMERICA

Philadelphia, the third in area, and the ninth in population in the world, is the staunchest city in America. Its founders, the Quakers, gave it that character, and although the Society of Friends is no longer a conspicuous element, the city continues to be the strongest in financial and commercial standing. This quality of staunchness, integrity, and even thrift has at times been designated as ultraconservatism. The history of Philadelphia is one continuous story of more than two centuries of progress.

Perhaps no city in the New World has been the scene of so many important historical events connected with the forming of the new nation. For over a century it was the metropolis of the country, the first in literature, science, the arts, with an unchallenged commercial supremacy. It has been a shipbuilding community since it was first settled, and extensive locomotive building is coeval with the operation of railroads.

Philadelphia was begun right. It was laid out under William Penn's direction, in checkerboard fashion, with five plots for public squares, for Penn wanted to found a green country town. The proprietor himself came over to superintend its building and to govern his Province with wisdom and justness. Pennsylvania was the best governed province in the colonies, and Philadelphia the best governed and most enterprising city.

The city's progress during its first century, owing to the slender opportunity for comparisons, seems much greater than since, when fifty cities in the Union are contending for recognition. On the ship that brought Penn to Philadelphia in 1682 was a printing press, the first in the colonies, although Jamestown was founded in 1607, Plymouth in 1620 and New York colonized in 1623. Within a few years the first paper mill in the New World was established in Philadelphia; in half a century the first type foundry; soon afterward the first Bible; the first insurance company; the first bank; the first medical school, etc. The list is entirely too long to enumerate, and it can be matched by no other city in the country.

In national history the City of Brotherly Love has played an important part. Many of the great movements that led to the Revolution started here. The first Continental Congress assembled here, the Declaration of Independence was adopted and signed here, the Articles of Confederation, under which the country was so marvellously governed for a dozen years, and finally the Constitution itself was adopted here. For ten years it was the seat of the National Government. The first man-of-war for the first navy of the new nation was built here, and here was made the first American flag with five pointed stars and alternating bars.

Until the war of 1812 Philadelphia's commerce was supreme, just as to-day its industrial supremacy is undoubted. The opening of the Erie Canal interrupted its commerce, but this has been gradually returning. As a City of Homes it is unrivalled by any large city in the world, and it is the metropolis of one of the solidest States of the Union; and unqualifiedly one of the few pre-eminent cities of the world.

WILLIAM HENRY MAULE RESIDENCE, "Briar Crest," Spring Mills, corner Gulf Road, Villa Nova
The exquisite home of William H. Maule, head of the widely known seed establishment, is on a hillside, overlooking Bryn Mawr and Haverford. Trees and shrubs from various parts of the world and decorative borders and flower beds make the grounds exceptionally beautiful
G. W. & W. D. Hewitt, Architects

EDWARD JAMES MATHEWS RESIDENCE, "Lesmore," Valley Forge, 23 miles from Philadelphia, on P. & R. Railroad "Lesmore" is a revolutionary mansion modernized for the comforts and conveniences of these times. Near the site of Washington's camping ground, it was used as headquarters by Lafayette. Mr. Mathews, who died in 1904, was a retired financier, president American District Telegraph Co., etc.

HARRY A. BERWIND RESIDENCE, at St. David's, 14 miles from Philadelphia on the Pennsylvania Railroad A most attractive residence, most charmingly situated amid many superb neighbors, is the chaste example of a stone Colonial mansion, the country home of Harry A. Berwind, of the Berwind-White Coal Mining Co. It was built for Fayette K. Plumb, and for a short time owned by William S. Taylor

WILLIAM WOOD, Residence, "Woodlea," Lancaster Avenue to Pennsylvania Railroad, Wayne In the well-developed suburb of Wayne is the magnificent English gothic home of William Wood, of William Wood & Co., manufacturers of woollens and worsteds, president and director of many institutions, surrounded by extensive park-like grounds, with many noble buttonwood and chestnut trees

Hazlehurst & Huckel, Architects

DR. GEORGE LEE STREET JAMESON RESIDENCE, Lancaster Pike, at St. David's, 14 miles from Philadelphia "Villa Florenza," the home of Dr. George L. S. Jameson, the Philadelphia dentist, with its ample grounds and fine stable, is one of the attractive residences on the main thoroughfare of the beautiful suburb of St. David's, on the main line of the Pennsylvania Railroad

B. Frank Livezey, Architect

MOSES PAXSON RESIDENCE, "Clemaria," at Radnor, Delaware County, Penn. Twelve miles from Philadelphia, on main line of Pennsylvania Railroad "Clemaria," named from their two children, the home of Moses Paxson, president of The Paxson & Comfort Company, is built of handsome light gray stone in the modern Colonial style. Standing on an eminence of 410 ft. above sea level, it commands an extensive view of beautiful landscape. An artificial pool contains Mr. Paxson's collection of rare water lilies

Horace Trumbauer, Architect

WILLIAM EDWARD HELME RESIDENCE, Lancaster Pike and St. David's Road, St. David's In the pretty suburb of St. David's, named from the quaint and secluded "Old St. David's Church at Radnor," about 150 yards south from Lancaster Pike, built of gray stone, on the crest of a hill, is the handsome home of William E. Helme, of Helme & McIlhenny, the Philadelphia manufacturers of gas meters. The grounds comprise 11 acres and adjoin the St. David's golf links

Addison Hutton, Architect

GEORGE ALFRED FLETCHER RESIDENCE, "Alstead," Gulf Road and County Lane, Radnor The substantial and artistic Colonial suburban home of George A. Fletcher, of Mitchell, Fletcher & Co., grocers, and of Schaum & Uhlinger, machinery manufacturers, is built of Pennsylvania marble. The estate comprises 65 acres of historic interest; being for a week the camp of Washington's army

JOSEPH SMALLWOOD VETTERLEIN RESIDENCE, "Knollhurst," at Radnor, 12 miles from Philadelphia The fine native stone Colonial home of Joseph S. Vetterlein, of Vetterlein Brothers, wholesale cigar manufacturers, is on a high plateau overlooking Chester Valley, with an unobstructed view for seven miles. On one side is Gulf Mills Road, over which Washington's troops marched to Valley Forge

JAMES HUNTER EWING RESIDENCE, near Lancaster Pike, Villa Nova, Delaware County, 12 miles from Philadelphia
"Woodstock," the historical and picturesque Ewing place, now over 150 years old, has been owned by the Hunter and Ewing families for several generations.
J. Hunter Ewing, the present owner and occupant, is a member of the venerable and esteemed banking house of Townsend Whelen & Co.

ISAAC HALLOWELL CLOTHIER RESIDENCE, "Ballymore," Wynnewood, 7 miles from Philadelphia
With square English tower, flanked by the more aspiring oriel, the castle-like residence of Isaac H. Clothier, merchant and philanthropist, formerly of Strawbridge & Clothier, is an imposing feature of lovely Wynnewood, named from Dr. Thomas Wynne, who came over in the Wylcome with William Penn

NATHAN PARKER SHORTRIDGE RESIDENCE, Lancaster Pike, Wynnewood, Montgomery County, 7 miles from Philadelphia

Furness, Evans & Co., Architects

Horace Trumbauer, Architect

JAMES WILLIAM PAUL, JR., RESIDENCE, Gulf and Eagle Roads, Radnor, 12 miles from Philadelphia on the Pennsylvania Railroad

The new country residence (completed in 1902) of James W. Paul, Jr., a member of the Drexel family and partner in the banking house of Drexel & Co. and one of the executors of the Drexel estate, is on high ground in a park of 230 acres of great natural beauty. The house, modeled after the half-timbered mansions of England of the 17th century, is one of the largest and most unique of suburban homes.

CHARLES HUHNS BEAN RESIDENCE, "Gothwold," Manchester Avenue, Moylan, Delaware Co., 13 miles from Philadelphia on the P., W. & B. R. R.

The summer residence of Charles H. Bean of the banking house of Chas. H. Bean & Co., Stock Exchange members, is an ideal country home, with its wide low stone house and broad piazzas, nestling among the grand old trees which abound on the place. The estate of 14 acres is most desirably situated in the midst of a fine hunting district and has its own private golf links and finely equipped stables.

THEODORE KITCHEN RESIDENCE, "Brendon," Waterloo Road and Devon Avenue, Devon, Chester Co., 16 miles from Philadelphia on the Pennsylvania Railroad

"Devon" is one of the finest suburbs of Philadelphia, widely known for its many beautiful homes and noted people, its Devon Inn, Polo grounds, golf links, etc. Among the residences is the Colonial summer home of Theodore Kitchen, the president of the Central National Bank of Philadelphia, etc.

WILLIAM FREDERIC FRAY RESIDENCE, "Oasis," Old York Road, from Juniper to Beach Avenue, Ogontz

On an elevated site, built of stone, surrounded by 15 acres of landscape grounds, with rustic stone gateway, grape houses, conservatories, etc., is the attractive Queen Anne home of William F. Fray, vice-president of the John B. Stetson Company. Many fine, rare trees ornament the grounds, which slope gently to a pretty stream that empties into a small lake well stocked with fish.

HOWARD BARCLAY FRENCH RESIDENCE, "Alderbrook," near King of Prussia, in Lower Merion Township, Montgomery County, Penn.
Amid highly improved naturally beautiful grounds, with gorgeous views over beautiful Chester Valley, historic Valley Forge, meandering Schuylkill, and various ranges of hills, is situated the country home of Howard B. French, head of Samuel H. French & Co., paints and cements, president Philadelphia College of Pharmacy, and identified with many public and philanthropic movements

JOHN SELLERS, JR., RESIDENCE, "Millbourne," West Chester Road, just west of 63d Street, Upper Darby
A charming country estate, modernized throughout, virtually within the city, being just across the border line in Delaware County. The property has been in the Sellers family continuously since 1682, when it was acquired by Samuel Sellers, the emigrant, who came over in William Penn's time

MARY PENNOCK SELLERS RESIDENCE, "Hoodland," State Road, Upper Darby
A picturesque estate, originally owned by John Sellers, grandfather of the present owner, and also of the eminent engineers and machinists of this time, William and John Sellers. The house was begun in 1822 and finished in 1824

S. Nineteenth St. Holy Trinity Church Photo. by Wm. H. Rau, in 1902 South Rittenhouse Square

RITTENHOUSE SQUARE, as seen from the southwest corner. One of five squares laid out by William Penn
Besides Centre Square, now covered by the City Hall, the founder provided a square in each of the four quarters of his city, marking the corners of a great rectangle. Rittenhouse, the southwestern, is the centre of the city's most fashionable and exclusive residence section. Washington Square was the Potter's Field until 1795, and contained the bodies of 2,000 soldiers. Franklin Square (northeastern) formerly had a well-marked Indian burial mound. Logan Square (northwest) was the scene of the great Sanitary Commission Fair, in 1864, and may become part of a projected grand boulevard to the Park

GOV. THOMAS MIFFLIN RESIDENCE, Ridge Road, Falls of Schuylkill
Home of the first Governor of Pennsylvania under the Constitution of 1790. Governor from 1790 to 1799.
The house is not now standing

WASHINGTON'S HEADQUARTERS, Valley Forge, 23 miles from Philadelphia
Occupied by Washington during the terrible winter of 1777-78, while the American Army was encamped in this section. Now an historical museum in care of Valley Forge Commission

OLD KEYSER HOUSE, 6205 Main Street, Germantown
Built 1738 by Dirck Keyser, a Mennonite. Well preserved and still occupied by some of his descendants.
Wounded American soldiers cared for here by John Keyser after the "Battle of Germantown"

GRANT'S CABIN, on the East Side Carriage Drive, Fairmount Park
A small building of upright hewn logs. General Grant's winter headquarters at City Point, Virginia, 1864-65.
Brought here at the close of the Civil War

THE "MONASTERY," Kitchen's Lane, Wissahickon Creek
Built about 1745 by Joseph Gorgas, succeeding an older structure, called The Kloster, occupied by members of a sect of German Pietists, the Dunkards, of whom Johan Kelpins was the head

LIVEZEY HOUSE, Livezey's Lane, Wissahickon Creek
Built by Thomas Livezey, a pre-Revolutionary Quaker, who operated a near-by flour-mill whose ruins are still seen. American and British officers met here on neutral ground

RECEIVER-GENERAL LYNFORD LARDNER'S RESIDENCE, "Somerset," with a wide river-front, at Tacony, on the banks of the Delaware
The Colonial home of Receiver-General Lynford Lardner, member of the Provincial Council, and brother-in-law of Richard Penn, one of the two proprietors and Governors-in-Chief. Four generations of Lardners lived here during 150 years. Here, too, lived Lynford Lardner's son, Cornet John Lardner, of the First Troop, Phil. City Cavalry, who served at Trenton, Princeton, Brandywine and Germantown

South Laurel Hill Cemetery

North Terrace

Cedar of Lebanon in North Laurel Hill

LAUREL HILL CEMETERY, PHILADELPHIA'S PRE-EMINENT NECROPOLIS, Eastern bank of the Schuylkill, between East (Fairmount) Park and Wissahickon Park. The cemetery, in its 100 acres, has three parts: North, the original part, the Sims estate, "The Laurels"; South, the Rawle estate, "Harleigh"; Central, the George Pepper estate, "Fairy Hill." North and South Laurel Hill are bisected by Nicetown Lane, over which is a triple arched ornate stone bridge. Founded in 1835, it is the oldest, excepting Mt. Auburn, and the peer of any American rural cemetery. All that vast wealth with an unlimited drawing on the greatest talent can do has been done here to make this a paradisaical city of the cherished dead. Here are many miles of tombs, vaults, monuments, etc., that have cost incalculable millions, and here have been interred innumerable eminent men and women. The interments are about 50,000. Its chief founders were Frederick Brown, John Jay Smith, and ex-Mayor Benj. Woods Richards, whose son of same name has been identified with the cemetery since 1865, and is now a director, secretary and treasurer.

Views of Philadelphia

SECOND SECTION. PAGES 1 to 106

This volume has two Sections: PORTRAITS (pages 1 to 112) and VIEWS (pages 1 to 106). In the Index below are two styles of figures: the heavy figures, 1, 2, 3,—referring to the Views Section, and the light figures, 1, 2, 3,—to the Portrait Section.

There are 3,600 Titles in this Index, comprising 5,000 references. In a volume of this character errors will get in. While printing, some have been discovered, and when there is a variation between the Book and Index, the latter is probably correct.
